	EXPAND THE RECORD

MICROSOFT HAS NOT SHOWN THAT A DE NOVO REVIEW IS APPROPRIATE

Microsoft assumes, without citing any authority under Section 1782, that the Magistrate's March 29, 2006 Order ("Order") should be reviewed de novo because the Order is a Dispositive Decision within the meaning of Fed. R. Civ. P. 72 and Civil L.R. 72-3. Matters concerning discovery, however, generally are considered "nondispositive." See Thomas E. Hoar, Inc. v. Sara Lee Corp., 900 F.2d 522, 525 (2d Cir. 1990). The standard of review in nondispositive matters is the "clearly erroneous or contrary to law" standard. Fed. R. Civ. P. 72(a). The only authority directly on point that we have been able to locate is In re Commissioner's Subpoenas, 325 F.3d 1287 (11th Cir. 2003), which states the direct opposite. In this case, the Eleventh Circuit held that the "standard of review by which [a district court] reconsidered the magistrate judge's determination of [a motion to quash under 28 U.S.C. § 1782] is clearly erroneous or contrary to law." Id. at 1291 n2.

Nevertheless, even if the court decided to review the Magistrate's Order under both a de novo and a "clearly erroneous or contrary to law" standard, as did the court in Highfields Capital Management L.P. v. John Doe, 385 F. Supp. 2d 969 (N.D. Cal. 2005), the Magistrate's Order should be upheld. In Highfields Capital, the defendant sought an order quashing a third party subpoena served by the plaintiff. The magistrate judge granted the motion to quash the subpoena. The district court reviewed the file de novo and, "because the defendant's motion to quash the subpoena could be characterized as a non-dispositive motion," also reviewed the report under the "clearly erroneous or contrary to law standard." Id. at 971. As Magistrate Trumbull's Order is based on sound reasoning and the application of established case law, under either standard, Magistrate Trumbull's Order should stand.
